FREEDOM AND CONTROL IS WHAT NEW LOUISVILLE PROVIDER OFFERS

Provider of services to people with disabilities opens its doors

LOUISVILLE, KY. – April 25, 2007 –“Our goal is to spread the word about ‘Self-Determination’ and show people how a Person-Centered Plan and comprehensive individual budget can be a vital piece of a person ‘s life, especially someone with developmental disabilities or acquired brain injuries,” said Ric Crowley, Executive Director for Community Living Services in Louisville.

“We offer several things that many traditional providers do not, including Gentle Teaching, Microenterprise development and expanded Case Management,” said Crowley.

Community Living Services, Inc. is a non-profit that has been in business for over 20 years and now through the Kentucky Supported Community Living Waiver, promotes community inclusion, full citizenship and a self-determined life for people with developmental disabilities. “We give people the tools to live the life they want and the community supports and services they want and need,” said Deborah Crowley, Associate Director.

“Self-Determination means freedom and choice. Freedom gained from having the authority to plan your own future, with support from family and friends if needed, and to direct funds which assist people with turning their plans into a reality. Self-Determination puts people in the driver’s seat to make decisions about hiring staff, where to work, who to live with and making decisions that will enhance their own lives,” said Jill Halevan, Community Services Coordinator. “We are now open for business in Kentucky and ready to support people to live life the way they want!”
